Kidnaper Of Charles Ross Is Executed

Seadlund Dies In Chair At Chicago For Death Of Kidnap Victim

PAYS PENALTY UNDER THE LINDBERGH LAW

Goes To His Death Calmly Shortly After 1 O'Clock This Morning

CHICAGO, July 14.—First Federal prison in the nation ever to die under the Lindbergh act, John Henry Seadlund, 27-year-old Minnesota backwoodsman, was executed in the electric chair at the Cook county jail today for the $50,000 kidnap-murder of Charles Ross, wealthy manufacturer.

Since Seadlund had been sentenced in the federal courts, his execution was carried out under jurisdiction of U. S. Marshall William O'Donnell, although it occurred in the county jail.

Seadlund was hustled into the death chamber at 1:02 a. m. and quickly strapped into the chair by four men. The current was shot through his body at 1:07 a. m. and seven minutes later three doctors pronounced him dead.

Dies Calmly

He died calmly, and without uttering a word in the death chamber. As he was being led into the chamber, however, he refused to allow guards to help support him by placing their arms under his elbows.

"I'm not afraid to die," he said as he shrugged off the proffered help. Shortly before his death he had eaten heartily of a chicken dinner. He also had received the last sacraments of the Catholic church, and added a macabre touch to his last hours on earth by conferring with the undertaker who is to bury his body.

Seadlund instructed the undertaker, C. E. Koops, in detail about his funeral, even asking him to have Mrs. Koops sing a hymn over his coffin as she did when Seadlund's father died five years ago. Koops said that Seadlund's body would be sent to his home town of Ironton, Minn., this morning for burial.

Seadlund told Koops that "I realize that I have brought my mother all this trouble," and requested the undertaker to tell his mother that he had made his final peace with God.

PA NEW OBSERVES

Fixing a leaking water pipe under a paved street is some job as hundreds of people found while watching a job on the south side of Washington street near the Perry street yesterday. First the workmen had to cut through the solid concrete, then the water came into the hole so fast that a big pump with two men at the handles, could scarcely keep it out, while a third man pried his shovel. One after another the pump was that it did not have to be primed.

Young Republicans of thirty-one counties are preparing for a big race to be held at Crooked Lake on July 23rd. Many of the old timers who have championed the cause of the party during recent years have passed away, and it is up to the younger generation to take their places. There is a great opportunity for real citizens, but no places for any more petty politicians.

Add New Chapter To Aviation History By Record-Breaking Flight

Howard Hughes' record-breaking round-the-world plane, flight adds another chapter in aviation history. Hughes, millionaire Hollywood movie producer, and his four flying companions and his plane are pictured above. They shattered Wiley Post's solo record of 7 days, 18 hours, 49½ minutes, which he set in 1931.

Wool Growers To Get $16,000

About 66,000 Pounds Of Wool Are Pooled Here This Week

SHIPMENT IS MADE TO BOSTON

Close to $16,000 will be brought into this district by members of the Lawrence County Wool Growers' Association in payment for this year's crop of fleeces.

The wool, 66,000 pounds in all, was gathered here at the B. & O. freight station Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, and was this morning shipped in freight cars to Patterson & Company, Boston, purchasers.

These figures on the wool pool were released this morning by Harold McCulloch of the Lawrence County Agricultural Extension Service. According to McCulloch, the wool weighed less this year than it did in 1937.

Although the number of fleeces remained at the same figure, the weight was charged due to the average weight of each fleece being less.

Katherine Hepburn Silent On Hughes' Hop Around World

Movie Star Has Been Linked Romantically With Hughes Frequently

SAYBROOK, Conn., July 14.—Katherine Hepburn was at the pallid summer home of her parents today as Howard Hughes, millionaire sportsman-aviator with whom she has been linked romantically, headed the end of his globe-circling record-breaking trip.

The screen star's mother, Mrs. Katherine H. Hepburn, when told by International News Service that Hughes landed at Minneapolis, said: "That's fine."

Asked if her famous daughter had any comment to make, Mrs. Hepburn said:

"Katherine will make no comment. Reports that placed the red-haired, freckled actress in New York where it was believed she was to meet Hughes, her neighbors suggested to me the rumors said, the grounds of her parents' estate."

Over 7,000 Gather For Grocers' Outing At Park Wednesday

As a hot July sun glistened amid the sylvan beauty of Cascade Park, more than 7,000 persons frolicked early at the tenth annual outing of the Lawrence County Retail Grocers and Food Dealers Association, Wednesday.

It appeared as though as the weathermen set aside the day for the merchants' affair, so perfect was the weather. The picnickers came from districts throughout the county to spend the day once again as guests of the association. The parking grounds was filled to capacity during most of the day. The various amusement rides got a real play. The picnickers took advantage of everything in the park, nothing being overlooked. In a few words, the outing was "tops" and a success from every standpoint.

At noon, the crowd commenced to assemble in the park. Until close to midnight, there were still quite a few persons cooling off following a day filled with activities. The program got off on the dot as usual, some 35 baskets, filled with all kinds of foodstuffs and goodies, going to lucky picnickers. The sports program, held at the pony track, was not only attractive, an unusually large crowd, but had the spectators laughing to their hearts content.

Dance Contests
Several hundred persons swayed to the melodious tunes of a local orchestra, in Rainbow Terrace pavilion, during the afternoon hours.

The contests started with the approval of the large crowd of spectators. In the fox trot event, Miss Jean Riley and Fred Riley, of 1206 East Washington street, won first prize. Mrs. Fred Pabian, 724 Court street, and Rudy Campbell, 201 Smithfield street, were second. Mrs. Dorothy Mayberry, 830 Vassar street, and T. J. Stevenson, 307 Hillcrest avenue, won the old fashioned waltz contest. Carrie Perry, 720 East Long avenue, and Harry Moore, 130 Big Run street, were second. The shag dance contest award went to Ruth Gerber, 317 North Mercer street, and Tony Gouin, 315 East Lutton street. Mary Ruffetta, 1115 Pollock avenue, and Al DeAugustine, 1118 South Jefferson street, were second.

The grove was the scene of a large crowd late in the afternoon. More than 25,000 cups of coffee were served. In the evening, bingo and dancing were the favorite pastimes of quite a few of the persons present, while others just sat back and enjoyed all about the sweltering heat of the city.

Due to the hot and dry weather, no special deer licenses will be required during the six day season hunters being privileged to kill one deer on their "regular hunting licenses," Biddle stated.

Attorney J. R. He said a tile sewer was built by the street railway company years ago and the city later secured the section where it exists when they took over the route formerly used by the New Castle Street Electric Railway company to Cascade park. Hughes And Four Flying Companions Far Ahead Of All Records

Huge Crowd Gathered At New York Airport To Greet Fliers

(BULLETIN)

FLOYD BENNETT FIELD, NEW YORK, July 14.—Howard Hughes and his four colleagues arrived here at 2:34 (E. D. T.) p. m. today, making aviation history with a new world's record for circling the globe by airplane.

Hughes circled the field twice before landing while a great roar went up from the 25,000 spectators.

He touched ground at 2:39 p. m., five minutes after arriving over the field, swung the huge ship around and began taxiing for the Administration building.

Stunned at the unbroken young aviator, wheeled his plane up the runway to the center of the space directly in front of the Administration building.

Hughes, a millionaire Texan, and his four daring companions, had hopped off from Floyd Bennett field at 7:20 o'clock last Sunday evening.

They electrified a world wide audience by circumnavigating the globe in 3 days, 18 hours and 27 minutes, nonstop time.

They smashed the globe-circling record of the late Wiley Post—7 days, 18 hours and 49 minutes—by almost four days.

The spinning propellers of the sleek craft came to a stop at exactly 2:32 p. m.

Hughes stepped out of the cockpit, a shy grin on his face, and was greeted by wild acclaim. His companions, too, were made the objects of adoration.

Hughes Looks Tired
Hughes looked a bit tired but otherwise was his calm, self-possessed self.

All five fliers waved to the crowd while camera men, atop their trucks, began to "shoot" pictures of the conclusion of the history making flight.

Mayor F. H. LaGuardia of New York City followed Hughes when the latter re-entered the plane and extended personal and official congratulations.

Graver Wheeler, head of the World's Fair, remained near the plane waiting for Hughes to emerge.

SHANGHAI, July 14.—An aerial bombardment today as Japan, her army and navy held up in the Yangtze offensive, carried the war to the great cities of Hankow and Canton again by air.

opened the throats and guided the ship into the air after running the full length of World-Chamberlain Field.

During the brief 30 minutes the plane was being fueled and serviced, Hughes directed operations and talked briefly of the flyers' overnight dash over the barren wastes of Eastern Alaska and Northwest Canada.

Hughes completed the flight here from Fairbanks in 12 hours and two minutes.

His trailing antenna torn away over Northern Alaska, Hughes and his companions had been out of communication with the world since 2:05 a. m. when he reported he was 375 miles out of Fairbanks.

During most of the dash across Canada Hughes guided the big ship at an altitude of 14,500 feet, necessitating the use of oxygen.

Once his ship was safely in the air here at the lakefront, Hughes swung in a wide arc over nearby St. Paul to pick up the regular airport beacon signal station. Once over St. Paul, the globe-circling plane pointed eastward and vanished in the bright sunlight.

Personal Message From Mrs. Post. As Hughes stroked into the Yukon valley after taking off from Fairbanks, Alaska, at 9:36 p. m. EDT last night he carried with him a "Godsend" message. It was bestowed personally by the widow of the man whose round the world record he is casting into discard—Mrs. Wiley Post.

Aided by policemen and airport attendants, she clapped her way to Hughes' side, grasped his hand and said:

"I wish you Godspeed."

Nearly all of Fairbanks turned out en masse to greet the 33-year-old sportsman speed pilot and his companions when the "New York World's Fair 1939" settled to earth at 8:19 p. m. EDT after winging over treacherous Siberian wastelands, the icy Bering sea, and the Alaskan mountains, twelve hours and 16 minutes were consumed in traveling from Yakutsk to Fairbanks.

Touching American soil three days and 56 minutes after leaving it in New York last Sunday night, Hughes and his associates exhibited a desire for hasty refueling when they alighted.

While crowds that had been assembled for hours applauded the flyers, service crews went to work on the "flying laboratory." Hughes and his companions refreshed themselves.

While the millionaire pilot supervised refueling, Radio Engineer Richard Stoddard admitted during a broadcast that the crew was "a little tired, but we were pretty comfortable on the entire trip."

"We are faced with the difficulty here of having only a 2,800-foot runway and we will be unable to take a full load," Stoddard explained. "Also, we will be flying into darkness from here and we want no mishaps at this late date."

Refueling completed and the motors turned up, the crew again entered the plane. On-lookers watched closely in silence as the producer-pilot speeded up the motors and moved into position for the take-off.

As the motors roared a good-bye to the land of the midnight sun, the ship swept down the runway and gracefully left the ground.

Cheers came from the crowd of bronze-skinned Indian men, women and children, miners and fur traders as the intrepid airmen disappeared toward the Yukon valley one hour and 16 minutes after landing at Fairbanks.

HANKOW, CANTON AGAIN BOMBED BY JAP FLIERS

Have rained along the Canton River, where bombs fell among crowds of vegetable peddlers and junkies. Thirty-four bodies were counted lying in one small section of the east bank.

Wounded in Canton alone were estimated at 450, and hospitals experienced the greatest difficulty in caring for the flood of sufferers.

Earlier a Japanese squadron bombed a concentration camp at Tsing-Cheng, near Canton, killing 240 and wounding 90. Other points in the Canton area were also attacked.

Sole Successes On Ground. Japan's sole successes on the ground were reported in southern Shensi, where the long-interrupted offensive has been resumed. After capturing the city of Yenching, the Chinese are retreating towards the Yellow river, according to Japanese reports.

Capture of Yenching—what remains following the "march north"—has been declared to be only a matter of days.

A dramatic rescue of the trapped Japanese garrison at Yenching has been effected by a Japanese column which broke down the gate after Chinese troops had surrounded the city, according to reports here.

In their other offensive, against Kukiang, below Hankow, the Japanese are unable to record any progress.

Hines Is Leading Byron Nelson In Shawnee Tourney

By LAWTON CARVER International News Service Sports Writer

SHAWNEE-ON-DELAWARE, Pa., July 14.—By the way around the course in 65, three under par, Jimmy Hines, the curly-headed blond from Great Neck, N. Y., today moved to a four-up lead over Byron Nelson of Reading, Pa., after the morning 18 holes of their 36-hole pro-am match in the National Professional golfers' championship.

Nelson, who blustered his layout yesterday with a 64, or eight under par, for today was 10 strokes higher due to difficulties encountered on the back nine.

He matched Hines, two under par outward 35 to go to the turn all even, but slumped badly on the way home.

Wool Growers To Get $16,000

than that of last year. In addition to there being less weight in the wool, a slightly lower price was paid by the purchaser than in past years.

When the $16,000 is received here, it will be distributed to the growers who pooled their wool. Each grower has in his possession a certificate telling how much wool and what grade he has in the pool. By surrendering these certificates to the association, the grower may collect the sum due him for his wool, minus a small handling charge.

W. B. Connell, sheep and wool expert from Pennsylvania State college, helped with the wool pooling here.

MUTUAL, Okla.—Cecil Matthews was wondering today what it is to be a farmer's best friend.

A crater 75 feet wide has formed on his place. The depth of the water-filled sinkhole is unknown as no one has ventured close enough to measure it because of the constant crumbling sides.

The crater is located near the main highway to Mutual and a close watch is being kept to see that it does not endanger the roadway.

Soft and dust permeating the air here, the crater and cause of precipitation, the Mellon institute reports.

PRESIDENT MOVES INTO CALIFORNIA

When they first saw him with the crowd, they were surprised to find that the man was not the president-elect, but a man named Sen. McAdoo, who was a candidate for re-election. McAdoo is a Democrat, but he is taking a temporary leave from his duties as a senator in order to run for re-election. The president-elect, Sen. INSURGENTS STAGE INTENSIVE DRIVE ON 8-MILE FRONT

Jose Mijang, however, maintained stubborn resistance, and the government air force was brought into effective play at Saragon.

Insurgent sources said five government planes were shot down, while Barcelona announced that eight insurgent planes were destroyed.

For the second day, the insurgent offensive straight along the sea-coast below Niles appears to have been held back by determined government resistance.

No Reply Made

Britain's plan for withdrawal of foreign "volunteers" from Spain was accepted by the foreign ministry at Barcelona today, but so far the Insurgents have not replied to London.

The government said it had always opposed alien influences in Spain and said it hoped that foreign troops could be speedily recalled to remove a threat to the peace of all Europe.

NO PATERNALISM WANTED

THE world seems to have entered the age of federal paternalism. The governing examples can be seen in Europe. In Russia the all-powerful government has abolished all private rights and is the sole guardian of the people. In Germany and Italy the government has permitted property for the most part to remain in private hands, but the government has seized control not only of the direction of this property but of many of the other individual rights of the citizen. In Germany and Italy, as in Russia, the excuse for this sweeping era of paternalism is that it is being done "for the good of the common man." And the trend toward paternalism is evident in many other European nations.

Even in the United States we have not been spared the spread of paternalistic influence in government. Many of the cherished policies of the New Deal today tend toward the control of private enterprise by the federal government. The New Dealers in instances have sought to curtail the powers even of the courts, in order to vest more authority in the chief executive, so that he might become nearer the "paternal" authority over the people and their enterprises. Here as in Europe, the excuse for the spread of paternalism—which is another word for building autocracy—is that it is being done in the interest of the people.

In view of these facts, any warning note issued by an American leader—especially one in close touch with a considerable section of the people—is always timely and worth quoting. In the recent Republican State Convention at Indianapolis, William L. Hitchcock, general president of the Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners in America, said:

"Way the outstanding nation of the civilized world, did not become such through government direction or supervision, and we should take a firm stand against government direction and interference in private enterprise; other than to the extent of seeing that the rights of others are not abridged."

"There is no country that can prosper and have a contented people that have their industries—the occupations of the people—their activities—of cetera—directed by the federal government."

NIGHT NO TIME FOR FAST DRIVING

Proposals before the traffic experts in conference in Washington that motorists be permitted to drive faster in daytime than at night and faster in open, sparsely settled areas than on main roads in more populous districts are not without merit. Speedy but careful driving under proper conditions, is less conducive to accidents than is a pace so slow as to hold up the procession and more tiring.

Fast driving at night, however, is in a different category. In itself it suggests a degree of recklessness that is the prime element in the horrible highway slaughter that has become the shame of America. Careful and thoughtful drivers don't try to break all known records when plowing through the darkness. There are times and places when driving moderately fast, with proper care, is not at odds with safety. But the time is not at night, nor the place a busy traffic lane through villages or populous countryside.

WHEN WE STOP GROWING

It is given to no man to see the future and see it whole. But the general soundness and unimpaired approach to exactness of actuarial figures dealing with life expectancy constitute one of the most impressive phenomena of modern life. For this reason far more importance than to mere guesswork must be attached to the estimate of the Committee on Population Problems of the National Resources Committee that this nation's population will reach a peak of 158,000,000 in 1980. That represents an increase in 45 years of 31,000,000 from the 127,000,000 population of 1935.

The committee further broods with the names of nationally known scientists. There is an alternative estimate of a peak of 232,000,000 in 1950, only 17 years hence. Cessation of population increase at the latter figure is based on the assumption of a constant rate of increase, but the proportions of persons surviving from birth to different ages or in different rates of women at different ages.

To most of us familiar with the history of what for centuries has been a frontier country with vast appeal for immigrants, for internal migration and development, it comes as a shock to realize that there is and can be such a thing as a numerical capstone. Realization that we have more than two and one-half times our population of 50,000,000 in 1880, and that since the 20th century dawn we have added two-thirds to our population of 78,000,000 makes it seem almost incredible we should stop growing.

The question, asks itself, What sort of a country is this of ours going to be when we stop growing numerically and perhaps even culturally? The answer is, or ought to be, that with greater development of natural resources, with a recognition of how many and what sort of people have to be dealt with, there ought to be better material conditions for all in that day. If that is not, or cannot be made, true, it will be a sharp reflection on the advances of a mechanistic age. In conjunction, as the statistics are a declining birth rate and increased longevity are tending to bring about a condition where there are relatively fewer people under 20 and relatively more people over 45.

The picture of the America of the future is, of course, subject to change. There may be new and unexpected need for more power when would let down immigration bars, so suddenly, or the conditions may become so much easier as to bring about a change in fertility trends, which are now and but far to be continuously modified.

Civilization thrives by a natural process. Its troubles result from authority's eternal meddling with it.

Continuing government policy makes you look silly. By the time your criticism gets into print, the policy has changed.

You can recognize a Frenchman anywhere. Only the French can camouflage it so you can't tell what's in it.

The Parent Problem

By Garry C. Myers, Ph. D.

TOO MUCH BOSSING

A young woman writing the editor of a certain magazine to commend an article I had written for it, added: "I have never started to do anything without my mother's permission. No matter what I started to do, mother came along and finished it for me. The result is that I am now a failure. I am afraid to tackle any problem or job, big or small, because of lack of confidence in myself."

I wonder how many of my readers could match the foregoing example of excessive parental bossing. I fancy hundreds could. Perhaps more young women than young men are so cramped in independence and initiative, since the young woman spends more of her time in the home, with her mother and engages in more jobs that admit of such interference.

Possibly this mother is hardly aware that she has done so much harm. Her conscious motives may be very high. Undoubtedly she has meant well. Mother Nature had just prompted her, in the urge to express maternal love. Unfortunately the daughter seems to have submitted. It was the easiest way out, in doing so she appeared to be very respectful and obedient.

Some Are Vexed

Some children have the good fortune to be greatly vexed by too much of such bossing, when their mother will help check such, but interference. Many a mother has written me of the child, especially from two to five, who will show objection, or even have a temper tantrum, if while at his play or work, he is told to do her way. A father once told me that he and his wife of twelve often have fights at night over home-work in arithmetic because the father insists on his own way of solving the problems and his wife's daughter's way.

In the matter of children, there are certain matters to be considered of course, such as respect of property and rights of others, otherwise there is no sense in our imposing our ways of doing things on the child. More than one good way to win a chess game exists.

Instead of trying to impose by force, we parents ought to encourage by praise and encouragement, though that will not exist over too much. Even if the way he chooses to do something should be as bad, or take twice as long as our way, what of it? Let alone his way, at times, discover that our way was better, and may choose occasionally to use our way. Best of all, he will gain self-confidence, building for the future.

The World AND THE Mud Puddles

TO RENO

Reno, Nevada, is an interesting place. If the motorist will travel Reno from the West, traveling out of San Francisco, there is no more scenic trip anywhere. On the way, crossing the border at Carson, the first interesting place is the village of Susan, the place where the West Wind blows, supposed to be the English equivalent of the Indian word. Should you happen to travel from East to West and enter this village, you will find your car in the summer time, coming from the Sacramento Valley, the cool air from the Pacific has just there for the first time.

Then, through the village of New Castle, California, the great center for distribution of the California peach crop. For miles around New Castle are great peach orchards, and on your way through the old gold mining country over Donner Pass to Truckee and Reno.

The Southern Pacific parallels the highway from Truckee, and Truckee and for the whole distance the road runs under snow sheds, so you realize what tremendous snow falls they have in and about Tahoe. The lake itself is eight thousand feet above sea level and the mountains around it rise fifteen hundred feet higher. It is nothing unusual to have fifteen feet of snow in Truckee.

This is a wonderful trip in the summer time and when you get to Reno there is something in the air that makes you think you are breathing the spirit of liberty. Everywhere the scenery you can go to the Court House and hear the divorce cases and that is really interesting.

TOO IMPATIENT

He wanted to be a man! Through beyond at top speed he ran. And happier seemed, from day to day, To be at work instead of play.

He envied men of strength and size, He dreamed of daring enterprise. The prize on him was sharply stung When some one spoke of him as "young."

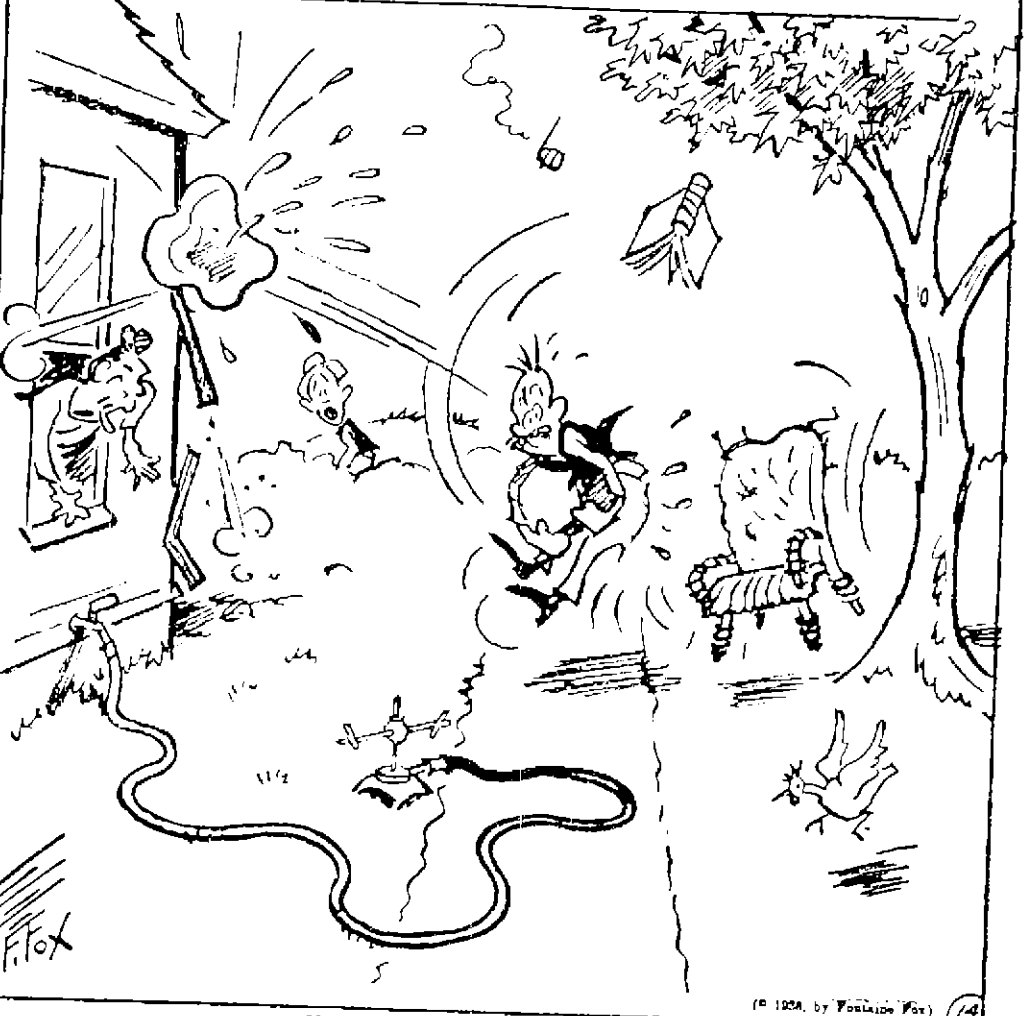

He raced across the printed page To find the wisdom of the sage. And tried, with feverish haste, to know.

But having known the ways of life, He found that wisdom was a little bit. The man that looked so wisely knew What and when to say and do.

Wonder if Jimmy Roosevelt thinks His education pays him $500,000 a year in influence commissions because they like his looks.

Recounts Attack Made By Hawk In Downtown Area

Wonder if anybody saw the aerial display of feathers at 6:30 Saturday morning? At that time, Queen Beak saw a sparrow hawk capture a sparrow on the wing. This sparrow hawk flew out of a group of trees at the corner of Gorton and East Washington streets, striking the sparrow in the back, then winging its way up Gorton avenue, and it was then the aerial display commenced. It was a thrilling and patriotic scene in the attack upon the hawk.

They winged above it, and below it, in an effort to get the hawk to release its prey. While the aerial display was taking place, the birds were singing, birds were singing. The flock of birds kept up for quite a while, right up to the North-south bridge, then it made a wide circle down the river back to Gorton avenue, with the pursuers close behind, then with a sudden burst of speed the hawk zoomed up over the roof of the high building near the Washington street bridge, with the prey still secure in its talons.

The peculiar feat of the sparrow hawk is that it will not attack its prey until it is in flight. Mr. Fox had two sparrow hawks in captivity for two years, and was able to study their habits. He placed sparrows in the cage with them, and the hawks did not molest them at any time, and were content to feed on chicken heads and meat.

The bulk of their feeding in their wild habitat consists of insects, snakes and moles.

Doubtless this attack on the sparrow was due to the fact that the sparrow hawk had a nest of young in the vicinity.

Sprinkler Is Installed At Rotary Playground

They have the heat wave licked on Moravia street. Or at least that part of Moravia street which is Rotary Field.

Every afternoon at 4 o'clock Old Man Humidity takes a respite, and a hundred or more boys and girls get cooled off and cleaned up at the same time.

It is all a part of the program of the Rotary club in sponsoring play activities at the field and after watching the antics of the youngsters Wednesday afternoon we wanted to peel off about 30 years and a lot of clothes and get into the aquatic fun.

A two inch upright pipe has been installed in a 20x20 sand box. As 4 o'clock a representative of the New Castle Water company goes down to the field, unscrews the cap from the top of the pipe, puts on a sprinkler head, hooks up a hose line from the water pipe to the upright pipe and the fun is on.

Like a lot of water nymphs or wood sprites the kids dance around under the whirling spray, enjoying it to the full and instilling envy into the hearts of the adults who stand by watching. Before the water is turned on a lot of them have embraced themselves in a coat of mud and for a time before the mud coat washes off some of them look like animated statues in bronze.

The Rotary club recently took on the work of helping the playgrounds on Moravia street and appointed Ross D. Rosenberger, Rev. J. A. Deem and Preston Flaherty as the committee to handle things.

A huge wire backdrop has been installed serving both the baseball and midget grounds, a shelter shed has been erected where clay modeling is taught, horizontal bars have been erected and other equipment is in the offing.

The need just now is money. What little money the Rotary committee had has been spent and they got about two for one for their money. But the pay off of the whole playground is the sprinkler system. Its simple but most effective when the temperature is hugging 100 out in the sun.

It is another expression of the Rotary motto to the profits most who serve best. With a little money and a little time from men who have the interest of the boys and girls at heart the Rotary club has brought happiness to a lot of kids in the Moravia street section. A couple of hundred dollars more and they could really do things.

Deputy Sheriff Faces Charge Of Killing Of Man

(International News Service)
HARLAN, Ky., July 14.—Lee Plesner, former deputy sheriff, and one of the defendants in the federal court and conspiracy trial at London, Ky., was to be arraigned on a murder charge after Harlan county's grand jury labor was claimed another victim.

Charles Reno, 40, died in a hospital last night after he was allegedly shot by Plesner seven days ago. Sheriff Clinton C. Ball announced immediately that Plesner would be accused of formal charges of murder. Reno was the third man to die of gunshot wounds in labor strife in the Harlan coal fields since the government started its London conspiracy case early in May.

Back Home With Her Ambulance

Park Playground Being Improved

Cascade Park Playground In New Location—N. Y. A. Aids Project

Sometime ago it was decided by Cascade park officials that the children's playground was too far removed from the grove where the majority of the people spend most of their time. Consequently, there was a decision to move the playground to a more suitable spot where the children could be seen from the grove.

The site chosen was a much more suitable location than the old one because of the great number of shade trees. The change necessitated a great amount of labor for clearing the ground. Grading and leveling were also necessary to prepare for the placing of playground equipment.

After all plans were made, the need for labor was filled from the National Youth Administration. A number of youths were given the task of making the playground possible.

Under the supervision of C. C. Coulthard, the work progressed rapidly. Clearing, leveling and grading has been done. Some of the equipment has been installed, and the new play center for children is a reality.

Steps are to be made down to the front when the road is to be made later on.

Mr. Coulthard hopes to have more equipment as soon as possible and has done a very good job of reclaiming old materials for use. He has some very fine ideas for a real play spot and with the help of N. Y. A. has made an excellent start.

Will of the late Eliza Wood has been admitted to probate in the office of Register and Recorder Orville Butler. Decedent leaves all of her property to her husband, John Wood, and names him as executor.

Thomas Reister and Recorder
John Butler, was at the court house yesterday and made a tour of the county jail, which he says he found in first class shape.

An application for divorce by Margaret J. Hackett of 932 Adams street against her husband, George W. Hackett, has been filed in the office of the prothonotary John A. Edgar.
The couple were married in 1904, and the application is made on the grounds of desertion.

County commissioners were in the Hillville district yesterday on business connected with the removal of some bandages which encircle the body of way of the proposed new road. While the road is in state project the county must settle claims for damages arising out of its construction. Most of the road goes through worked over limestone territory and it is not anticipated that there will be any heavy damages.

A live turtle of the land variety is a novelty by way of a paper-weight in the office of the prothonotary. It was presented to the office by Deputy Sheriff Clyde Badger, having been found in an alley back of the jail. It is about four inches in diameter and appears quite tame.

Superior court papers in the case of Benjamin Thomas, administrator in the estate of the late Greenwood Thomas in which payment of a life insurance policy of $325 in the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company was at issue were received at the prothonotary's office today.
The company had refused to pay on the grounds of certain answers to questions in the application, which it was claimed were not in accordance with the regulations. The verdict was in favor of the plaintiff.
An appeal was taken and the opinion of the lower court sustained.

State Highway officials held a conference with the county commissioners yesterday on the matter of the claim for damages by Eli Byler, who owns property at Puckstown.

corners, taken by the highway department in widening the Youngstown road. A corner was cut from the property, leaving a tract of about 12,000 square feet on the west side of the curve. The department wants the county to pay for this land while the county claims it is only liable for the land taken. The site is large enough for a service station, but it is claimed that permission to erect a station there cannot be secured from the state highway department because it would obstruct the view.

Judge W. Walter Braham has handed down an opinion in which he refuses the application of Howard E. Richards for a divorce from his wife, Toliba Richards. The application was made on the grounds of cruelty and indignities. In his opinion Judge Braham says, "We find from all the evidence that if the husband did have marital difficulties, they were almost entirely of his own making. The respondent impresses us as a patient, quiet woman, who had been, for the most part, endeavoring to do her duty.
Notes written by the husband do not indicate that he is the injured party. They indicate a man in whom there is a great deal of inner conflict between his better self and his worst self, with his wife on the better side. No police officials superior to the husband were called to testify that his wife had interfered with his work."

AROUND CITY HALL

Plans have been made for the construction of a storm sewer in Cum-mington avenue between Division and Taylor streets. After the sewer is built the avenue will be paved.
City engineers report.

Traffic policeman George Sigler collected tickets for parking violation. He reported that in his opinion about $800 will be realized from motorists as parking fees for the past 10 days.

Due to the D program of paving being started it is likely that the materials bought recently by the city will be rushed here so there will be no delay in the work. About $50,000 will be spent for the materials.

John Young, investigator in the police department, has returned from a vacation. He spent some time in Atlantic City and New York.
While in New York he visited Jack Dempsy and Maxie Walker.

Counterfeit $10 bills are being circulated here. Two were passed in two different business houses. Chief of detectives Ray Showalter has notified the Secret Service of the counterfeits being passed.

Construction of stone pillars around the park plots on the Public Square is proceeding. These ready finished have been connected with chains. When all are done the appearance of the plaza will be enhanced.

City police in charge of traffic report that the new traffic arrangement is working out nicely in East Washington street. An auto traveling at about 17 miles per hour usually has a green light between Cotton avenue and the Public Square.

The city streets department sweeper operates between midnight and six a. m. on Tuesdays and Fridays. Autos are asked not to park then look their cars on downtown streets which are swept.

Police reported today that persons who park their automobiles on the railroad track in the P. & E. E. driveway will receive parking violation tags. The track is next to business houses on the west side of the driveway.

It is likely that Safety Director J.
Myron Rice will have two firmento the department, when council meets Thursday. He has 37 persons available for the positions. All of them pass the civil service test.

SOUTHERN CUSTOM

By Richard Hill Wilkinson

as I told you yesterday. Maybe they'll become apologetic too."

Her eyes were suddenly wide with alarm. "Please don't! I'm afraid they wouldn't understand."

"O. K. But I'd like permission to call on you."

She shook her head. "Father wouldn't permit it. He's still bitter and unhappy about the whole thing. Somehow he blames you." She bit her lip. "After a while he'll change. I—I'm going to talk to him."

He came close and looked down into her face. His eyes were sober. "That's the trouble with the South. Folks let little petty grievances stand in the way of getting what they want. It's ridiculous, so utterly childish."

SUDDENLY aware of the intentness of his gaze, she looked quickly away. "There's nothing Dad wants that you can help him get. Nothing any of us want."

"But there's something I want. Something I'm going to try mighty hard to get, despite the fact that the odds are stacked against me. It's something I discovered yesterday, something I had always thought only existed in story books." He laughed suddenly, delightedly. "And that's why I'm going down right now to have a talk with your dad. He's probably much more human than you give him credit for being."

"Don't!" she cried. "Don't! They—they might harm you."

"Just who is 'they'?"

"Cal Dodsworth and Jerry Gladwin and Tom Bushnell. They've been my friends since childhood. I—I told Cal yesterday that you put me off the place. He was furious. He said you ought to be thrashed."

"And you don't want me to be thrashed, is that the idea?"

"Partly. I tried to explain to Cal that you were right. He wouldn't believe me. He's a gentleman of the old school, chivalrous and gallant and brave. There's no telling to what ends he might go if he thought it was his duty."

"Wait a minute. Let me get this straight. Is it Cal you're afraid will get hurt, or me?"

Her voice was pleading. "You're making it very difficult. Please try to see. To you, a northerner, it doesn't seem important. But to us—to Dad and Cal and me—it's tremendously important. They wouldn't understand why I came here today. They'd think me crazy."

"I think," Simon Kenyon said slowly, "I'm beginning to understand. You didn't come here to apologize. You aren't interested in me one little bit. It's Dodsworth you're thinking about. You made the mistake of telling him I fired you off the place yesterday. He became incensed and threatened to thrash me. But you weren't so sure he was capable of doing it. Your consciousness is merely a means to an end. And I was fool enough to think it was I you were interested in protecting. Well, I've been taken in before, but never quite so neatly."

It was noon when Jessica arrived at their cottage. The house was deserted. She ate lunch alone, thinking of Simon Kenyon, wishing fervently that she might never see him again. Never in her life had she been subjected to such treatment, such abuse. She wished she almost wished that Cal would carry out his threat.

Thoughts of Cal reminded her that he had promised to stop for her at three for a set of tennis. When the appointed time came and he hadn't arrived she became uneasy. At three-thirty the uneasiness gave way to alarm. With all his faults, Cal was punctual.

By four o'clock Jessica's mental state had reached a point bordering on panic. At four-thirty she called the Dodsworth plantation and was informed that Cal had left shortly after lunch. She thought: "He's rounding up Tom and Jerry. They'll have a few drinks somewhere and then set out for Broad Acres to teach the damn Yankee a lesson. They've been looking for an excuse ever since he came here. And until now they've had our sympathy."

DRIVEN to action by a fear she didn't stop to analyze, Jessica set out on foot for Broad Acres. It was a good two miles, but if luck was with her she could half some passing townsman and get there in time. A half mile from town she heard a car coming behind and turned. But the driver ignored her. Jessica began to run. She was suddenly panicky, beset by fears, and an urge to reach her destination that was more important than anything she had ever known.

At the fork where the road leading to Broad Acres branched off the main highway she saw a boy on a horse coming toward her. A glad cry escaped her lips, for the boy was Andy Washington. She knew that he had come down for the mail at the rural delivery letter box.

The negro boy stared at her in wide-eyed wonder.

"Andy, has—is Mr. Cal at Broad Acres?"

"Yesum. He was. Him and Mistah Jerry and Mistah Tom."

Her heart sank. "Where are they now? What happened?"

"Nothin' happened, ma'am. They 'lowed they wanted to see Marse Kenyon. But Marse Kenyon had done rode away 'bout noon time and ain't come back."

"Oh! Her spirits revived a little. "And what did Mister Cal and Mister Tom do? Are they still there?"

"No'm. They done rode down to the river lot to see Marse Kenyon."

"The river lot?" Impatiently she shook the negro boy by the shoulder. "How did they know he was at the river lot? Did you tell them?"

"Yesum. They done asted me. I told 'em Marse Kenyon had gone down there to see about the new fence, like he done told me to." Andy's eyes had grown wide again. He was a little frightened. He'd never seen his former mistress so white or so excited. Somehow he knew he'd done something to displease her. "Marse Kenyon done told me to tell 'em that," he repeated defensively.

Jessica bit her lip. "All right, Andy," she said quietly. "It was right for you to do as Mister Kenyon said. I'm going to borrow your horse, if you don't mind. I'll return him to the stables later."

The horse was a spirited animal, a black with white stockings. Jessica had ridden him many times, and now as she flew along the familiar unpaved roads toward her former home she thanked heaven that Simon Kenyon had maintained the habit of allowing Andy Washington to ride the hunters down to the letter box for the exercise he gave them.

The river lot was a long narrow strip of covered country. The fence that Simon Kenyon proposed to build would extend from the water to the rocky peak of the highest hill on the lot's northern boundary, thereby preventing sportsmen entering the estate from that direction. The fence would ruin hunting possibilities in the whole north country.

JESSICA held a straight course along the river bank, urging the black to its utmost. She was in fact so intent upon this task that she failed to see the horseman approaching from the opposite direction. A familiar nicker caused her to throw up her head, tugging on the reins.

The approaching horse was her white hunter, Lobo, and the man riding him was Simon Kenyon.

Jessica drew the black up on its hind legs. She was so relieved at the sight that she forgot her buttiness of a few hours before.

"Thank heaven you're safe! I—I was afraid I wouldn't get here in time."

Kenyon reined the white hunter up close. "In time for what?"

Cal and his two friends. They—they came looking for you. Andy told me. They must have taken the high trail."

"And you rode up here to warn me?"

He was watching her steadily. Her heart began to pound. She was suddenly aware of the significance of what she had done, aware of what it meant to find him unharmed.

"I didn't want any trouble. There's been enough already. Cal and Tom and Jerry had been drinking." She hesitated. "You'd better ride back. I'll stay here and talk to them. And when Simon Kenyon only stared with an amused twinkle in his eyes, she pleaded. "Don't you see I can talk to them? I can make them understand. It's no longer a matter of being defended. Of course I know it sounds silly, but that's the way it is. Please go!"

"Do you want me to go because you're afraid of what might happen to me?" he asked soberly.

"You're the most stubborn man I've ever known. You don't seem to realize that there's real danger." Another pause, and then desperately. "Of course it's you I'm afraid for. Now will you go?"

"No." Suddenly his face was alight with the same joy that had characterized it early that morning. "No," he repeated. "You couldn't drive me away. You'll never be able to—I stopped at the expression that had come into her face.

Over his shoulder Jessica had caught sight of a trio of horsemen emerging from the thick growth that lined the trail. She stared at them in speechless wonder. The foremost was Cal Dodsworth and Cal was holding a crimson-stained handkerchief to his nose. Behind Cal were Jerry Gladwin and Tom Bushnell. One of the latter's eyes was completely closed; the former was dabbing at a bruised spot on his cheek. By and large they were the most formidable looking trio that Jessica had ever seen.

They stopped at sight of the pair blocking the trail. They looked at Jessica and looked at Simon Kenyon. Simon Kenyon said "Boo!" and made a sort of lancing motion in his saddle. The result was astonishing. Of one accord the trio turned their horses and went galloping off through the brush.

Simon turned back to the girl, grinning. "Southern gentlemen, suh. Defenders of the honor of their lady, suh." He stopped. Jessica's eyes were flashing.

"Simon Kenyon, you deliberately—you knew—you let me tell you—you're the most hateful man I know! You're nothing but a damn Yankee!"

"Sure, sure," said Simon Kenyon soothingly. "So what?" And suddenly he reached out. His arm encircled her waist. With his free hand he slapped the black snarl on its rump. The animal bounded away, leaving Jessica suspended in mid air. A moment later, protesting vocally and physically, she was being held very tightly and very close to Simon Kenyon on the back of her white hunter. "How," said Simon Kenyon, "would you like to become Mrs. Damnyankee?" Whereupon Jessica continued to protest vehemently, but not vehemently enough to sound convincing.

Jessica had caught sight of a trio of horsemen emerging from the thick growth. She stared at them in speechless wonder.

not like you, Jess. Something's changed you." Her eyes flashed. "That's ridiculous! If I've changed, it's only to come to my senses. You and I and the rest of our crowd have all lived too long on tradition, on—the fruits of other people's labor! It's a carryover, I suppose, of conditions the way they were when Granddad was alive. Father and I could have saved Broad Acres if we'd been willing to forget our pride and not been afraid to work!"

LYING in her bed that night, for the first time Jessica was seeing things as they were, and the humiliating part was that her eyes had been opened by a damn Yankee!

The next morning she was awakened by a rapping on the front door. It was Andy Washington, one of the negro boys who had worked at Broad Acres and whom Simon Kenyon had dismissed. He handed her a note. "It's from Marse Kenyon, m'am. He role me to give it to you."

"Marse Kenyon?" Jessica asked. "Yesum. Use workin' for him now. He done hired us all back again."

Jessica opened the letter, conscious of the blood throbbing in her temples.

"Dear Miss Martin: You were right and I was wrong. I've taken down the no trespassing sign. Will you let me apologize in person?"

She wrote a hasty reply and handed it to Andy. "Tell him I'll be there in two hours," she said.

Two hours later she met Simon Kenyon on the path that followed the brook. He was riding Lobo, her white hunter, and at sight of her the animal nickered.

"Thought you two might like to see each other," Kenyon said as he swung to the ground. "Mighty fine horse, Miss Martin."

"He—he's the best there is." A lump rose in her throat as Lobo's moist muzzle brushed her cheek.

Kenyon, looking at her steadily, said: "I'd like to give him back to you, if it would make up for yesterday."

"I couldn't take him. Besides, it wouldn't change anything." She turned to look at him squarely. "It's I who should be apologizing, Mr. Kenyon. That's why I answered your note. Everything you said was the truth. We haven't been fair or hospitable or just. I've known it for ever so long, but I've been too proud or stubborn to admit it."

He stared at her, speechless. She had turned and started back along the path before he found his voice. "I say! Look here! You don't mean that. I mean, it's rather a surprise."

"Is it?" She paused, controlling a sudden flash of anger. "We were hateful."

"Why, that's O.K.! Please don't go. This isn't what I expected at all. I had a speech made up about being lonesome and a little sore at everyone because no one aided neighborly. I'm stubborn too, you know. That's why I posted the property. It seemed my only way of getting recognition. It was you showed me the light. After yesterday I began thinking about it and realized how wrong I was."

"You weren't wrong," she cried impatiently. "You were right. You know you were. Why do you say those things when you don't mean them?"

He grinned. "O.K. Let's not argue about it. One fight with you is enough. I'd a heap rather be friends." Suddenly he sobered. "Does your father know you came over here to apologize?"

"No one knows. I came because I—felt indebted."

"I get it," he sighed. "Perhaps I'd better go down and have a talk with your dad and young Dodsworth, tell them a few things just Jessica's lips, despite her best effort, began to tremble. She turned and walked deliberately back along the path that followed the brook beneath the live oak trees. Simon Kenyon stood watching her, his grey eyes troubled and regretful.

WHEN Jessica reached the small white cottage, she found Cal Dodsworth sitting on the vine-covered porch talking to her father. The Dodsworths were all that was left of the old families in and around Montross who had clung to their fortunes during the dreadful years following 1929. Cal was an only child and one day he would inherit his father's lands and his father's bank account, which was still estimated in six figures. He was a handsome lad, medium height, dark, arrogant, hot tempered. He had grown up with Jessica and it was generally believed that one day they would marry.

Cal stopped in the middle of a sentence when he saw Jessica coming up the walk. He stared a moment, then sprang to his feet. "Jess! Good heavens! What's happened? You're as white as a sheet!"

"I've been over to Broad Acres," she said. "I wanted to see if anything had changed." "You shouldn't have," her father said. "The land's posted. The right isn't ours any more, even if he is a damn Yankee."

Jessica whirled on him. "Isn't it?" she stormed. "What right has he to post that land? Broad Acres has been Martin property for two centuries. It's never known a fence or a trespass sign! It's been open to anyone who wanted to ride on it, providing they respected common courtesy and the state hunting laws. What right has he to come down here and order us to keep off?"

"Every right. The right of ownership." Her father was mildly reproachful. "Perhaps if we had respected the common courtesy of which you speak, my dear, we wouldn't now be deprived of the privileges we so matter of factly assumed were ours."

Cal asked rigidly: "Did he order you off?"

"Yes."

The youth sucked in his breath. "Damn his Yankee hide! I'll get Tom Bushnell and Jerry Gladwin and—"

Jessica made a gesture of deep scorn. "And thrash him to within an inch of his life, I suppose? The three of you could probably do it—in the style of real southern gentlemen." Her eyes mocked him. "Though to make sure, why don't you call on the state militia to help?"

Young Dodsworth's mouth fell open. Before he could find his voice, Jessica ran through the house and out on to the small terrace behind. Hibiscus and flame vine flowered on the edges of a quarter acre of velvety green lawn. She flung herself face down and sobbed. But tears proved small relief to her tortured mind.

Five minutes later Cal came through the house. She sat up, trying hard to smile.

"Please, Cal, it's no use. Mr. Kenyon's right. He's absolutely right. We snubbed him when he first came down. We were proud and aloof and hateful. We acted as if we were doing him a favor by assuming rights that were no longer ours. Now he's mad and—and there's nothing we can do."

Dodsworth stared at her a moment in thoughtful scrutiny. He said slowly: "That's vast acres, was young and handsome. "So," she said, her voice contemptuous, "you're the new owner of Broad Acres? You're Simon Kenyon?"

"That's right." He came toward her, a thin smile playing about his lips. "And you're Jessica Martin. I can tell that by the way you look, by your saucy, impudent manner which you're trying to disguise as pride! The pride of the Martins! The great and honorable family of Martins, suh. For generations lords of Quale county. Respected, loved, admired. Generous, unselfish, hospitable. Hospitable! Ha! That kills me!"

The blood came and went in Jessica's face. Never in her life had she been talked to like this. And by a damn Yankee! Why, if Tom and Cal knew, they'd thrash him to within an inch of his life. Or would they? Her eyes traveled over Simon Kenyon's lean, muscular figure. He had wide shoulders and narrow hips. The thought that he was probably capable of taking Tom and Cal and knocking their heads together brought on renewed fury.

She opened her mouth to speak, but he interrupted her. "You're the first Martin I've met and I can't say I'm much impressed. You're just about everything I expected, all bound up in a false pride that gets you nowhere." His tone became derisive. "The hospitable southerners! Great Scott! You might think I'd committed a crime in buying Broad Acres."

"You posted it!" Jessica accused defensively. "You bet I did! But not," he reminded, "until I discovered that I was to be treated as an alien, an impostor, by the whole countryside. Why shouldn't I post it? I buy a piece of property and the former owners seem to think they have the privilege of using it for their pleasure just as they did before the family exchequer took a dive and the banks foreclosed, without even showing the new owner the courtesy of requesting his permission. You bet I posted it," he added vehemently. "And the 'keep off' notice includes everyone!"

"Mr. Kenyon, you're utterly loutish no. They said you were, and now I understand why." He laughed at that. "Ah! The good old southern spirit! And neatly expressed, too." Suddenly he sobered and leaned toward her. "Jessica Martin, you've lived too long on pride and tradition and the traits of other people's labor. It's time you changed if you're ever going to be worth your salt. A good sound spanking might help and I've half a mind to give you one!" He hesitated, impelled into doing so by the expression that had leaped into her clear brown eyes. "I think I will," he added, "the next time you ignore my trespass signs. It may teach you to respect the rights of others."

Missionary At Plaingrove U. P.

Friday evening of this week an interdenominational group of young people from Butler and Lawrence counties will have one of its monthly inspirational meetings at the Plaingrove U. P. church at 8 o'clock.

Rev. E. Y. Clements, who has passed 25 years as a missionary in India, will be the guest speaker. On his way home for his last furlough Rev. Clements visited China, Japan and Korea and had unusual opportunities of visiting Christians native and white in those countries.

This will be a song and testimony service, especially for young people, but for others interested as well.

Several Champs To Battle Here

Fistic Events Are Arranged For Grove Street Bowl Monday

SEVERAL LOCAL BOXERS ON CARD

Indications point to several knockouts when the Jefferson Athletic club holds their weekly fistic event in the Grove Street playground Monday night. This is taken by the quality of the match arranged and is likely as though the Standing Room Only sign will be displayed before the first bell rings at 8:30 p.m.

Shaky Robinson, the fistic colored champion of O. C. C. will have a tough assignment on his gloves because he has been matched against Billy Wade of Pittsburgh who holds the Golden Gloves championship of the Atlantic Mountain section of the Amateur Athletic Union.

In such a row will be the Peppermint, Green Thompson, 135 pounder of O. C. C. and Sholly Bell of Youngstown. Bell did not appear to fight when he was matched against Sholly Bell of Youngstown. Bell did not appear to fight when he was matched against Sholly Bell of Youngstown.

Fair Trade Act Hearing Before Court Concluded

Defense Alleges Other Merchants In City Sold Goods Below Cost

DISTRICT ATTORNEY
MAKES STATEMENT

Hearings before Judge W. Walter Braden and Thomas W. Dicke in the case brought by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, through District Attorney John G. Lamoree against the Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company, in which it was charged that goods had been sold below cost, contrary to the Fair Trade act, was completed at the Lawrence county court house Wednesday evening.

The plaintiff had filed a bill in equity and a preliminary injunction to restrain further alleged violations of the law, pending a final hearing on the law was asked. At the conclusion of the testimony, points of law were argued by Attorney William Eckert, of Pittsburgh on behalf of the tea company and Attorney William J. Caldwell in behalf of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

At the conclusion of the hearing District Attorney John G. Lamoree stated to the court that this was only the first case in connection with alleged violations of the Fair Trade act, and that it was proposed to see that the act is enforced in Lawrence County.

The court took the papers in the case and will hand down a decision later.

The plaintiff rested its case Wednesday afternoon following testimony by Harry Preston of the Preston wholesale company; David Valen, of the J. J. Dean Company; Palmd Paden, Angelo Pridem and Cecil Patter of this city, and Constance Granger of Pittsburgh, salesman for Pels Naptha soap. They had all seen the advertisements of the A. and P. Company and claimed that Pels Naptha soap and associated goods had been advertised below cost.

A. R. Waters, assistant sales manager of the Youngstown office of the A. and P. Company, was the principal witness for the defense. He said that his territory embraced eastern Ohio and parts of western Pennsylvania, including Lawrence County. He said that he had had a conference with District Attorney John G. Lamoree, regarding the Fair Trade act, and that Mr. Lamoree had told him that he was expecting to enforce the law in Lawrence County. Mr. Waters had assured him that his company had no intention of violating the law and was willing to co-operate in maintaining peace.

Explaining the advertisement in which ten bars of soap had been offered for 25 cents, Mr. Waters said that they had been running their prices preparatory to placing advertisements in the newspapers of the district. Some fifty prices had been charged and the Pels price had been included among them.

The advertisement, he said, had only been run once, when the mistake had been corrected. The sugar price of $1.20 per 25 pound sack had been made to meet competition. He claimed that other merchants here had been advertising it at that price.

Mr. Waters had a number of copies of The News, which he pointed out, contained advertisements of merchandise below what his company could buy for. He claimed that some of these prices were so low that rather than reduce their price, they had left the articles which were being advertised by others out of their advertisements. He said that his company had no intention of violating the law.

Joseph Smith, assistant sales manager of the Atlantic and Pacific Tea company, also gave testimony somewhat similar to that of Mr. Waters.

The Human Side Of The News

(By EDWIN C. HILL)

Copyright 1938 King Features Syndicate, Inc.

Twenty years have passed without divulging one clue to the utterly inexplicable disappearance of the United States Navy Collier Cyclops, which sailed from Barbados for Baltimore in 1918, disappeared from the face of the waters.

No one has ever advanced a satisfactory explanation. No hurricane swept the Caribbean in the period when the Cyclops was at sea. There was expert and authentic testimony that the collier was sound and well-kept in all respects. Even a terrible boiler explosion would have left some trace in material, in flotsam and jetsam. And the theory that a far-seeing German U-boat had torpedoed the collier and sent her to the bottom with every soul aboard, while appealing to some, was never believed, taken seriously by the navy department.

Such mysterious disappearances are not unfamiliar in the lore of the sea. Ten years ago the Danish training ship Kobenhavn vanished from the sight of men with 600 aboard. She sailed from Montevideo, Uruguay, bound for Melbourne, and was never seen again. There were various clues as the years passed—wreckage, identifiable skeletons found in a small boat which had washed ashore on an African beach—but the fate of the good ship Kobenhavn remained a mystery.

Sea folk in every part of the world still talk, after 66 years, of the queerest of all disappearances, not of a ship but of a whole ship's company—the crew of the American brigantine Marie Celeste. The legends are many about the Marie Celeste, legends which have been spun out of millions of words and which have followed one upon the other.

Within the last decade two new and weird authentic accounts of what happened aboard the brigantine on a day in late November, 1872, have been put into the record.

Three-quarters of a century ago they launched the good ship Amazon in the yard of a Nova Scotian town. Eleven years later the brigantine was beached and battered by a gale. An American firm bought her, patched her up and re-named her the Marie Celeste. On November 1, 1872, the Marie Celeste sailed from New York for Genoa, carrying 1700 drums of alcohol with Benjamin Briggs commanding. His wife and daughter were with him and the crew numbered seven, a total in all of ten persons.

More than a month later the British brig Del Gracia came upon the Marie Celeste off the coast of Portugal. The Englishman observed that the American ship was sailing erratically. Getting no answer to signals, the English ship proceeded to give chase. Catching up to the Marie Celeste the Del Gracia found there was not a soul aboard.

For ten days the derelict had sailed 750 miles without a hand to set a sail or steer a course. Everything aboard her was in perfect order. Mrs. Briggs sewing was neatly arranged in her cabin. The few valuables of the captain were untouched. An entire lack of disorder seemed to prove conclusively that there had been neither mutiny nor riot when the ten persons left the Marie Celeste.

The English brig's Captain Mershouse put a prize crew on board the abandoned ship and took her to Gibraltar. The English authorities investigated and the American owner crossed the ocean to make an investigation of his own. The explanation arrived at by these sea-faring men was that Captain Briggs had abandoned ship prematurely owing to leakage in the alcohol drums which made up his cargo.

The deduction was that fumes from these leaking alcohol drums gave rise to an exaggerated fear of disaster. Thereupon the company of ten from the Marie Celeste put off into the ship's yawl to be dropped in some way most likely on the shores of a volcanic island in the Azores. That was one theory and only a theory at best.

And so the mystery remains a mystery to this day, the classic of its kind. Consider once more the utterly tranquil and undisturbed condition of the Marie Celeste's deck and cabins. No bloodstains anywhere, or the least sign that any such stains had been erased. Nothing upset or wrecked apart. Not the slightest sign or hint of mutiny or murder.

The captain had abandoned not only his watch and money but those things which a ship's master holds as dear almost as life itself—the ship's log, chronometers and compasses. The seamen had left behind their money in their sea chests, together with every scrap of their simple possessions. The only thing which seemed to be missing was one small boat. Into the unknown fled the ten of the Marie Celeste's company, driven, it must have been, by some fear or horror which has never been fathomed.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—
Without Calomel—And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Ready to Go

The liver should pour out two pounds of fluid into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. One block up your stomach, you get constipated. Your whole system is "clogged" and you feel sour, sick and the "liver" doesn't get at the cause. It's a good, old, Carter's Little Liver Pills of these two pounds of bile flowing in, and make you feel "up and up." Harmless, gentle, yet amazing in making bile flow freely. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name. 25 cents. Stubbornly refuse anything else.
